Recently, victims from multiple countries who escaped from the notorious KK Zone scam area in Myawaddy, Myanmar, disclosed that the zone not only involves online scams and violent coercion, but also has illegal organ harvesting facilities staffed by specialist doctors and operating rooms, with organs trafficked to the black market priced between $100,000 and $1,000,000.

Once You Cannot Work, Organ Harvesting Is Pursued

Victims claim that once they can no longer continue working in telecom fraud or are no longer of use, they are transferred to a secret surgical area for organ harvesting.

This includes cases of missing Belarusian woman Vera and Kenyan woman Grace; the former was harvested for organs and cremated after failing to pay a huge “ransom,” while the latter died after surgery while escaping to Thailand. Another Russian woman was only rescued urgently after diplomatic intervention.

They Collect Blood Samples To Find Matches

The UK’s The Sun quoted victims saying: the zone collects blood samples from newcomers to create files to screen for black market organ demand. Experts point out that organ harvesting requires a medical team and complete equipment, indicating the KK Zone is tightly organized internally.
